

Covid-19 effects on retirement planning

Coronavirus has reminded us all that sudden changes can and do impact our lives and that most likely, these will not be signposted in advance.

That means we cannot all plan at a leisurely pace and wait for their impact.

Instead, more of us now realise how important it is to already have a robust financial plan in place that can be adapted to meet our financial needs, as we pass 50 and beyond.

We have outlined some key areas of financial planning that has been impacted in recent months and the benefits of a tailored advice process to build a personal financial plan.

It's been a busy and challenging time for us helping clients through this difficult period, our phone-based service has allowed us to keep working and provide support to both new and existing clients with:

- ✓ Retirement planning and understanding the options available to maximising income over the long term.
- ✓ Investment planning and the impact of market volatility and low interest rates.
